Yes, summer time is nigh and that means one thing – numerous trips to the beach! We love hanging out at the lake, soaking up the rays, and building sandcastles. My son has been asking to go to the beach since February, and up in the chilly northern regions, it was hard to explain he had several months to go. But now we're taking stock, gathering together the beach umbrella and making sure we've got lots of chemical-free sunblock – and of course, picking out the suits that we'll all be sporting this year.

My son will look especially dashing in his Haiden Surf Boardie suit. This particular pattern, the Surfin' USC Toddler Boardie, is so bright and colorful that I can't help but love it. A nice tropical print in bold oranges, yellows, and reds, it's not only trendy and hip, it's easy to spot. And for any mom, knowing you can pick you kid out of a crowded beach of rambling toddlers is not only convenient – it's imperative!

Another great feature with this suit is its great construction. Kids are always scootching on their butts in the sand and giving their suits a real workout. I've no doubt this one will last the summer. And since there's no liner (why does any baby or toddler bathing trunk need a liner?) we can fit that beachy diaper under the suit without making him feel strapped in. I think we'll be a little better off this year (I hope), but last year my son seemed to need to produce his own tidal wave only moments after suiting him up. Unless you've got a private beach, most kids need to fit some extra protection under the suit!

Haiden Surf, started by two Southern California surfin' moms, is loaded with very cool swimwear; far from average, the styles are comfy yet hip for even the smallest of surfer dudes. Ready to win your own Surfin' USC suit ($36 retail)? Let's get you ready for summer!

I love the RASH GUARD ONESIE, really great for a day at the beach, especially with the SPF protection it provides. We need our boardie in size 2T.

I love how their site is laid out. Really fun to shop.
